Stinger Medical Announces Expansion of Services and Solution Offerings

(Murfreesboro, Tennessee. March 21, 2006) Stinger Medical, provider of mobile solutions and medical technologies, announces the expansion of their service and solution offerings for 2006.

“The focus for the last year was to deploy our own sales force to be more closely attuned to our customers and their needs,” says Todd Jackson, vice president of sales for Stinger Medical. “We have learned a great deal about our customers and are now offering expanded service and support options and enhanced solutions to better serve our customers’ needs. We are now prepared to help our clients from the inception of a project through the maintenance of deployed solutions.”

Stinger’s expanded services include: factory integration of hardware and peripherals, hardware imaging, on-site integration of hardware and peripherals, on-site preventative maintenance and warranty services.

“We have been helping clients make the transition from ‘islands of information’ (paper/charts) to ‘information: anytime – anywhere’ (electronic medical records) environment for more than ten years,” says Gary Coonan, founder and CEO of Stinger Medical. “Stinger is in a unique position to help care environments evolve because we have experience in the marketplace and flexible manufacturing techniques. Every solution is built to order and fully customizable. Our manufacturing and engineering flexibility allows our clients to create solutions that will work where they are today and adjust to where they want to be in 2 yrs.”

To highlight their customization abilities, Stinger displayed both tiger and zebra mobile workstations at HIMSS 2006 in San Diego, CA. “They were the belles of the ball,” says Dana Harris, marketing executive of Stinger Medical. “We have had several requests for a herd of zebras for pediatric wards.”

“Many people were not aware of the extent to which we can customize our solutions” says Mr. Jackson. “It is exciting to watch the faces of new and existing customers when they realize how much Stinger will do for them; that in fact, they can not only have a tiger workstation of their very own, but that workstation will do everything they need it to do and a few things they haven’t thought of yet.”

RhinoGuard™, Stinger Medical’s silver-based antimicrobial product incorporated in the paint and plastics, is also new for 2006.

“Infection control is a major issue for our customers and their patients,” says Mr. Coonan, “Our workstations are taken directly to the point of care and are exposed to a myriad of pathogens. RhinoGuard™ helps to keep our solutions cleaner longer by inhibiting the growth of a broad range of bacteria, fungus and mold, on-contact.”

Stinger’s hybrid mobile medication workstation, the Fusion™, has been redesigned to better serve clients’ medication administration needs.

“We have received a lot of great feedback from our customers about our Fusion™ mobile medication workstation over the last year,” says Gary Brodnax, manager of product development of Stinger Medical. “We have responded to customer feedback offering larger drawers, an improved base design and even more aesthetic features.” The Fusion™ will be production-ready in late 2nd quarter of 2006.

Stinger Medical continues to offer the integrity® automated vital signs solution, improved wall and arm mount solutions, the proven Levitator™ mobile workstation and the Slimline™ tablet or small form factor mobile solution.

Stinger solutions will be on display at AONE, in Orlando, FL, April 20-22nd and at ANIA, in Nashville, TN, April 21-22nd.
